

IFM Market Segmentation by Service Type

Key Takeaway: Support services generate more than half of the global IFM revenue.

Total IFM Market: Percent Revenue Opportunity Breakdown by Service Type, Global, 2013

- Support services accounted for 51.1% of the global IFM market in 2013. Cleaning, security, and catering are the largest service segments within support services.
- Cleaning, security, and catering are largely flat markets in the developed IFM countries but are growth markets in the emerging IFM countries. In several IFM contracts, cleaning and security are sub-contracted.
- IFM providers in developed IFM markets are continuing to expand into niche support services such as document services, front-of-house services, or courier services to add value to their offerings and increase their value proposition.
- Revenue from building operations and maintenance (O&M) was second-highest in the global IFM market, as the higher price per used hour in hard FM still does not equal the revenue for the more labor-intensive support services. This service segment has room for growth in developed IFM markets, too, due to higher service sophistication and more outsourcing potential.
- Value-add services account for the smallest but fastest growing portion of the IFM market. Property management is the largest service within the value-add services group, followed by environmental services (including energy management) and IT & telecommunications services.
- Global and local property management/real-estate companies have been continuing their expansion into the IFM space, while many IFM providers have been increasing their capabilities in energy management services.
